

HAPPY Fall y'all

Our Week

Our field trip to see Snow White today was so much fun! The class had great behavior on the bus as well as in the play. They all looked so great in their Fancy Friday clothes, and got to eat lunch at 'fancy' tables this afternoon.

The students practiced and learned the soft sound for letters c and g this week. They now know have been taught all of the letter sounds and should be able to show you their letter movements for all of them!

This week I started doing guided reading during Daily 5. The students are in different groups that come to my table to practice making words, and reading books. Their book baggie went home with them this week along with a note for you inside. Please let me know if you have any questions about book baggies as the year goes on.

In writer's workshop, students learned that even when they think something will be too hard for them to write or draw, they should say to themselves 'I think I can I think I can' just like the Little Engine That Could. They also began writing across 3 pages to make their writing into books. I'm so impressed with what they are writing about, and how good they are at sounding out their words already!

We had our Veteran's Day Assembly yesterday, along with a little Sock Hop Celebration for our 50th day of school!

Next Week

Poem: I'm a Little Turkey
Letters/Sounds: CVC words
Number of the week: 10

Next week for guided reading, I will be teaching the students the Lips the Fish and Stretchy Snake strategies. They get their lips ready to say a word by making the sound for the first letter. They stretch their sounds across the whole word to help them figure it out.

In math, students will do one more week of reviewing counting, shapes, sorting and positional language.

In writer's workshop, students will continue to attempt to write 3 page books. We will talk about planning what should go on each page before we write, and making sure the story has a beginning, middle and end.

If you're free Tuesday from 4:30-6:00 I would love to see you at Family Reading Night at Ridge! We will be reading books, making crafts and the book fair will also be there!
